LEXINGTON, June 25.

We are authorized to give to the public, the following detail of Facts, relative to the operations of the Expedition under Brig. Gen. Scott, against the Savages of the Wabash.

The Army marched four miles from the bank of the Ohio on the 23d of last month. They resumed their march on the 24th and pushed forward with the utmost industry, directing their route to Ouiattannon in the best manner their guides and information enabled them though greatly deficient in both.

By the 31st. they had marched one hundred and thirty-five miles, over a country cut by four large branches of White River, and many smaller streams, with steep muddy banks; during this march, they traversed a country alternately interspersed with the most luxuriant soil, and deep clayey bogs, from one to five miles in width, rendered almost impervious, by brush and briars. Rain fell in torrents every day, with frequent blasts of wind and Thunder storms. These obstacles impeded their progress, wore down their horses and destroyed their provisions.

On the morning of the 1st. inst. as the army entered an ocean of Prairie, they perceived a man on horseback, a few miles to the right; a detachment was sent to intercept him, but he escaped. Finding themselves discovered, they determined to advance with all the rapidity their circumstances would permit, rather with the hope, than the expectation, of reaching the object sought, that day; for the guides were strangers to the country which they occupied. At 1 o'clock, having marched by computation, one hundred and fifty-five miles from the Ohio, as they penetrated a grove, which bordered on an extensive Prairie, they discovered two small Villages to their left, at two and four miles distance.

The guides now recognized the ground, and informed them that the main town was four or five miles in front, behind a copse of wood, which jutted into the Prairie.—Col. John Hardin was immediately detached, with sixty mounted infantry, and a troop of light-horse under Capt. M'Coy, to attack the Village to the left, while the main body moved on briskly in order of battle, towards the town; the smoke from which was discernable; the guides were deceived with respect to the situation of the town, for instead of standing at the edge of the plain, it was found in the bottom bordering on the Wabash; on turning the point of the copse of wood one house only presented in their front. Capt. William Price was ordered to assault that with forty men, and he executed the command with great gallantry, killing two warriors; when they gained the margin of the eminence, which overlooks the Villages on the banks of the Wabash below, they discovered the enemy in great confusion, endeavouring to make their escape in canoes over the Wabash. Lieutenant Colonel Commandant Wilkinson, was instantly ordered to rush forward with the first battallion, the order was executed with promptitude, and this detachment gained the bank, just as the rear of the enemy had embarked, and regardless of a brisk fire kept up from a Kickapoo town on the opposite bank, they in two minutes, unloaded five canoes, crouded with savages.—The Wabash was many feet beyond fording at this place, col. Wilkinson was therefore detached to a ford two miles above, which the guides informed them was omre practicable. The enemy still kept possession of the Kickapoo town; King's and Logsdons companies were ordered to march down the river, below the town, and cross under the conduct of Maj. Barbee, in order to dislodge them; several of the men swam the river, and others passed in a small canoe, this movement was unobserved, and the men had taken post on the bank, before they were discovered by the enemy, who immediately abandoned the Village. About this time word was brought, that col. Hardin was incumbered with prisoners, and had discovered a stronger Village farther to his left, which he was proceeding to attack. Capt. Brown was immediately detached with his company to support the colonel but the distance being six miles, before the captain arrived the business was done, and col. Hardin joined the army a little before sun set, having killed six warriors, and taken fifty-two prisoners—Capt. Bull, the warrior who discovered the army in the the morning, had gained the main town, and given the alarm, about one hour before them, but the villages on the left were uninformed and had no retreat.——The next morning it was determined to detach the Lieut. Col. Commandant with five hundred men, to destroy the important town of Kethtepeconunk at the mouth of Eel river, eighteen miles from the camp, on the West side of the Wabash; but on examination, it was discovered that the men and horses were too much crippled and worn down by a long laborious march, and the active exertions of the preceding day, that three hundred and sixty men only could be found in capacity to undertake the enterprize, and they preferred to march on foot, Col. Wilkinson marched with this detachment, at half after five in the evening and returned to camp the next day at one o'clock, having mached thirty-six miles in twelve hours, and destroyed the most important settlement of the enemy in that quarter of the federal territory. The inhabitants of this Village were principally French and lived in a state of civilization; by the books, letters and other documents found there, it is evident, that place was in close connexion with, and dependent on Detroit; a large quantity of corn, a variety of household goods, peltry and other arricles, were burned with this Village, which consisted of about seventy houses, many of them well finished.

Misunderstanding the object of a white Flag, which appeared on an opposite eminence in the afternoon of the 1st. an aged Squaw was liberated, with a message to the Savages, that if they would come in and surrender, their Towns should be spared, and that they should receive good treatment.——On the 4th, 16 of the weakest and most infirm of the prisoners were discharged with a Talk to the Wabash Tribes. On the same day after having burned the Towns and adjacent Villages, and destroyed the growing corn and pulse, the Army began their march for the Rapids of Ohio, where they arrived the 14th without the loss of a single man by the enemy, and five only wounded, having killed 32, warriors, and taken 58 prisoners. It is with much pride and pleasure we mention, that no act of inhumanity, have marked the conduct of the volunteers of Kentucky on this occasion, even the inveterated habit of scalping the dead ceased to influence.——41 Prisoners were delivered to Capt Asheton of the 1st U.S. Regt. at Fort Steuben.

We sincerely lament that the weather and the consequences it produced rendered it impossible to carry terror and desolation to the head of the Wabash.

The corps were equal to the object, but the condition of the horses and the state of the provisions were insuperable obstacles.

By a gentleman who this day arrived from Orleans by land, we are informed, that himself and 6 others were attacked on the Tenesse at the mouth of Duck creek on the 11th inst. by 25 Creek Indians, 3 of this party were killed and one wounded----He farther informs that M'Gillivray has withdrawn himself from the Creeks, in consequence of their hostile determinations and that they are encouraged by the Spaniards.

Mr. Bradford,

By inserting the incloſed you will oblige

A VOLUNTEER.

AMONG those who have exerted themselves to promote measures for the destruction of our savage enemy, no one holds so distinguished a rank as Colonel John Campbell of Louisville. Nothing can give more encouragement to those who turn out as volunteers, than the holding out to them the idea, that by encountering difficulties and dangers, they will ensure to themselves, the very highest of rewards, the applause and assistance of their fellow-citizens.

When the late army, under the command of General Scott, arrived at Fort Steuben, on their return from the expedition, fatigued, hungry, and the greater part of them without money; they were invited by col. Campbell to refresh themselves at his house, where all who went, were furnished with good beef or mutton, and as much grog as they chose. The writer of this letter partook of the colonel's bounty, and saw at least three hundred men eat and drink at his house in one day—Indeed as long as any of the troops remained at Louisville, the Tables were kept constantly spread. The writer has it in view to return public thanks to colonel Campbell for the entertainment he received, and to call the attention of the district to his conduct, as highly worthy of imitation.

I WISH to lease for the term of one year, the Distillery and adjoining plantation, late the property of Mr. John Craig on Clear creek, Woodford county; also the Mill on the plantation whereon the said Craig now resides——possession of the distillery to be given on the first day of September next——of the adjoining plantation and Mill aforesaid on the first day of January following or earlier, with the consent of Mr. John Craig——For terms apply to Mr William Morton. Merchant, Lexington.
